Unit 2: Using the Numbers / Yes-No Questions

2.1 Grammar / Yes-No Questions

In deaf culture, when deaf people meet each other, they usually prefer to hug one other rather than shake hands or greet. Because they are close to each other, their chats are relatively more sincere and they talk about things in deep detail as though they live that moment again. Their conversations are more direct and open.

Whereas hearers might speak indirectly or use implied meanings in their social lives, the deaf do not use such elements in their conversation

2.3 Deaf Culture/ Greetings within the deaf

In deaf culture, when deaf people meet each other, they usually prefer to hug one other rather than shake hands or greet. Because they are close to each other, their chats are relatively more sincere and they talk about things in deep detail as though they live that moment again. Their conversations are more direct and open. Whereas hearers might speak indirectly or use implied meanings in their social lives, the deaf do not employ such elements in their conversations

2.4 Deaf Culture/ Eye Contact

Eye-Contact is another important element for an effective communication to take place. Apart from the signs that are made by hands, sign languages also include the movements of the eyebrows, mouth and head. Therefore, it is necessary to keep up with the mimics and gestures so as to convey or grasp the intended meaning correctly. That is why you can see the deaf observe not only the hands but also the facial expressions, mimics and gestures in their conversations
