Unit 6: Hobbies and fields of interest and activities / Question words

6.1. Grammar / Question Words

The topic of the unit is the question words. We briefly studies question words in unit 4 but we are going top study them in more details. All language users can recognise a question, because the structure of a question is different from other sentence structures. Questions are requests for information or for an action. The person who asks the question expects a response.

Questions are structured very differently in English and BSL. For example, an English style of question such as "Won't you sit down?" would never be asked that way in BSL.

W-H- questions have a much wider range of possibilities for an answer than Yes or No. WH questions in English include words like What, Where, When, Why, Who and Which.

Non-manual features are important in BSL and it's important to use these when asking questions. Tilting your head and moving your eyebrows are examples of non-manual features and can indicate you are asking a question

Questions differ in structure and form from other types of sentences in various ways, including: questions. They may be "interrogative" In English they may have a special intonation (in speech) or punctuation in writing (a 'question mark'). BSL uses facial expressions and eyebrow, head and body movements to mark
